Dr. Levin,

I wanted to make sure you knew I didn't forget about you today. We've been moving offices and getting everything turned back on and I did want to get back with you on this topic.

If you're planning on replacing three PCs, I'd consider moving up the time table on converting to virtual desktops. We can replace these with thin clients for a lower cost and further upgrades in the future would all happen on the server (the individual thin clients contain no data, nothing that can be lost).

The downside to this is the initial investment in the server and software. If this is something you'd like to see actual figures on let me know and I'll get a quote put together.

If you were simple replacing a single PC, I would replace the one and wait to make the investment until a few more new computers are required.

Thanks,
